

British Rich in Minerals

Practically Every Known Metal Is Found in England

The news that the vast beds of iron ore in Northamptonshire are to be worked on a grand scale adds to the fact that Britain is still one of the richest metal-bearing countries in the world. This remains true, despite the fact that during the past half-century, the total value of minerals raised in Great Britain was about three thousand million pounds of pounds. Of this, coal represents about two-thirds; the rest comprises nearly every metal or mineral in common use and a number of the rarer ones. Coal and iron still produce the lion's share of the value of the minerals of the British empire, but as the value of the other minerals has increased, the value of the coal and iron has fallen. This is due to the fact that the value of the minerals has increased, while the value of the coal and iron has fallen. This is due to the fact that the value of the minerals has increased, while the value of the coal and iron has fallen.

A Lesson From History

Depression Of 1927 Served As Example As Present One

Denial Webster, that famous economist of a century ago, came to Detroit in 1927 and delivered a speech to 1,000 citizens of the raw and bustling city. He said that it would be well to learn a lesson from the depression of 1927. He said that it would be well to learn a lesson from the depression of 1927.

The problem of unemployment has become general in all large cities. Special committees have been organized to provide food and clothing for the unemployed. In addition to this effort, some cities have caused work to be inaugurated by public bodies. Widespread want and distress have led to labor strikes.

To Assist Barter Trade

Report Station Clearing House Will Be Established in England

A central clearing house to facilitate the bartering of goods in Great Britain and other countries is to be established in England, the chairman of the Grimsby Chamber of Commerce said to a London newspaper reporter recently.

Several important barter transactions have taken place in Great Britain and foreign firms. Among these are:

Four hundred thousand tons of Welsh coal were exchanged for 36,000 cords of Newfoundland pulp.

A Leeds firm received Spanish wine and distill for wool yarn. Lancashire cotton is being exchanged for Hungarian linen.

Cross and Blackwell, who are exchanging food produce for Canadian goods.

Newcastle firms are sending wheat to the Finnish and Swedish railways in return for lumber.

Wells coal is being exchanged for Canadian goods.

A Wolverhampton firm is exchanging fish for Chilean grapes.

In the case of the latter, the exchange for Canadian grain being exchanged for Canadian grain.

Nature Cannot Be Defied.

It is recorded to-day that God created man and gave him dominion over all the earth, over the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, over every living thing that moveth upon the earth. In a word, over the whole world. This is the story of the Bible, and it is the story of the world.

Deferring his dominion over every living thing, and as a means of exercising control over man and to secure for himself the maximum of health and comfort, man has given forth and assumed control over many of the forces of nature. He has overcome the obstacles of nature, and he has driven the forces of nature to his service.

But not content, man has attempted to control other laws of nature, other which he was not given control and which, despite all his efforts, are ever and will be beyond his control. As a result of his ambition and rivalry, he has created a world of his own, a world of his own making.

As time passed, and life became more and more complex, this struggle for national dominion, national control for many, became more intense, but with the progress of education and civilization it developed a physical force. This is the story of the world, and it is the story of the world.

The world was created for man, the whole world for the whole race of man. The world was created for man, the whole world for the whole race of man. The world was created for man, the whole world for the whole race of man.

The world was created for man, the whole world for the whole race of man. The world was created for man, the whole world for the whole race of man. The world was created for man, the whole world for the whole race of man.
